Collinsville, Tulsa

by L.

Hello, Tulsa!

This is Collinsville, your sister city on the north.

Well, hardly a sister city. Rather, let us say, a pretentious suburb to Tulsa. And we will give to you Tulsa, you are some city and we are glad you are just stone's throw from us.

Ever hear of Collinsville?

No? Well, whether you have or not, here is some do that may interest you, especially you Tulsans who are looking for a good place to live where you can carry on your Tulsa work and not spend all of your salary and then for rent and grocery bills. If you are interested, read on.

Collinsville is the second city of Tulsa County, a town not quite as old as Tulsa City, a town that has had some opportunities and improved most of them, and a town that has caught, in a measure at least, the Tulsa spirit.

You will not find in this little city perfection in any of its forms. We know of only one city where perfection is supposed to exist, and that city, we are told, is not in this world. But you will find men and women and organizations who are striving after perfection in community life and doing the very best they can to bring about conditions that make for right living.

The Business Men's League is an active and aggressive organization of the citizens of the community, looking after the boosting of the affairs of the town generally. There is the usual quota of women's clubs and these clubs, by the way, are becoming more and more imbued with the idea of doing community service for the boys and girls and for the town generally. A year ago the City Commissioners passed a Welfare Ordinance and there was created a Welfare Board that has for its chief function the supervision of amusements and every phase of community life that tends to affect morals.

There is a splendid little Carnegie Library, which is more than an attractive building, for the building contains a usable number of books and the books are used by the people who stream into the building in the afternoon and evening. The schools are working in conjunction with the libraries and the kiddies from the schools must do a part of their work from books obtained from the library.
